raku

A close-up photograph of a Raku ceramic vase. The vase has a bulbous body and a narrow neck. The surface is covered in a crackle glaze, creating a network of fine, irregular cracks. The colors are muted and earthy, with shades of green, brown, and tan. The lighting is soft, highlighting the texture of the glaze.

Raku means “ease”, “comfort” or enjoyment”. Raku ceramic promotes these feelings. Rakuware is a style of pottery developed in the 16th century in Japan. Raku is a low temperature technique of firing porous, low bisque fired pottery usually bearing a lead glaze. The technique generally involves a placement of pottery in a pre heated klin with tongs and removal from the klin, again with tongs, while the pot is still glowing hot (around 1000C). The colours are unique and is achieved by very careful attention of glaze chemistry, application and firing on specially prepared Raku clay body.

A field of clay touched by the genius of man becomes a castle.

Twenty five years or more I have been living and traveling with ceramic and pottery art, inspired by nature.

☞ The media itself has magical quality and therefore endless possibility. Wonders can be created using a lump of clay using different techniques which result in shifting the work in to a magical realism. I have been sharing my passion for ceramic with others over a decades and with this in my mind I am setting up a mission in providing ceramic education and awareness to others. As a first step a fifteen days raku workshop is being organized in my studio in Thiruvananthapuram. My aim is to promote and propagate ceramic art to maximum extent possible and make my studio a hub for this endeavor.
